

< The episode begins with the warthog and mongoose driving out of the base. >

Collins: Where exactly are we headed too? Did command say anywhere specific?

O'Brian: Actually... I have no idea. There was some static and command just sort of... faded out.

Kelen: Are you serious...

O'Brian: Yes I am serious. I heard something about relocating and just took it as leaving.

Kelen: Pull over guys.

<Both warthog and mongoose stop>

Kelen: Basically we just committed a crime here.

Collins: What do you mean?

Kelen: We left our positions. You know... AWOL.

O'Brian: No we didn't.

Kelen: Yes we did! We left without orders to a location that was not even given to us!

O'Brian: We got orders...

Kelen: Static, does not mean orders.

Jones: Sweet, now I can add criminal to my completed jobs list.

Collins: This is not good. This is not good... -worried-

O'Brian: Listen, I am the superior officer here. I believe we got an order and we are going to be following that order.

Kelen: A "static" order...

O'Brian: Will you just be quiet woman.

<Kelen ignored O'Brian and takes a few paces away from them, out of view>

Collins: What if we really did commit a crime though.

O'Brian: I heard an order and we will be sticking to that order. We will be driving to the nearest base and taking our positions there.

Jones: And there... we can commit more crimes.

O'Brian: We have not committed any crimes!

Jones: That's what you think.

<O'Brian sighs and looks over at Kelen and then proceeds to stand next to her>

Kelen: What do you want?

O'Brian: I... -coughs- We are headed out. Come on.

<O'Brian heads back to the warthog and then they drive ahead. Kelen starts to head back over to the mongoose when she hears static in her headset again>

Kelen: Static...

<The camera then follows the group until they are stopped at a body of water>

Jones: No way... I didn't know this was here.

O'Brian: Dammit.

Kelen: What's the issue?

O'Brian: There's a huge body of water there!

Kelen: So...?

O'Brian: The laws of physics will not allow vehicles of this mass to float and or to drive on a pure liquid surface.

Jones: In English please?

Collins: He means we can't cross at all.

Kelen: Why not?

Collins: Do you not see the huge body of water!?

Jones: Women apparently can't drive or see.

Kelen: (Stares back at Jones) You guys are idiots.

<She exits her vehicle.>

Jones: What, are you going to nag the water to death?

<Kelen proceeds to hit a wall, which is supposed to be there, but instead is hitting nothing but air>

Kelen: This... is not right.

Jones: -whispers to O'Brian- Told you she was crazy.

Kelen: I am not crazy!

Collins: Says the one who is punching thing air.

O'Brian: They do have point here.

Kelen: No. I studied the maps. There is a door here which is supposed to lead out of this area. Except... there is nothing.

Jones: Duh, because there was never even a door there.

Collins: I do believe you can say she has gone batty.

<Kelen ignores them and faces the wall of water and thinks to herself>

Collins: I believe a transfer is in order.

Jones: No wonder why women always crack under pressure. Look at her!

<the three of them look at Kelen as she then begins to walk back and forth>

O'Brian: I never heard of a door being here either, but I never expected water to be here as well.

Collins: The way the road looks like it would lead to somewhere, but where...

O'Brian: For now, until this ... water disappears.

Jones: Is the water going to magically disappear now?

O'Brian: I have no idea! Yes... yes it will disappear.

<Collins and Jones stare at him>

Collins: I do believe... two transfers are in order now...

O'Brian: No one is going to be getting transferred. For now we are headed back to base.

Collins: But... whatever attacked us could be there –whiney voice-

O'Brian: There is no other way to get where we were headed.

Jones: We didn't even know where we were going.

O'Brian: Enough. I make the commands here and I am saying we are heading back to base.

Collins: -mumbles-

Jones: Wait, I don't want to go back.

O'Brian: - slightly growls- And why not...

Jones: I would lose my criminal status. I can't take that risk!

Collins: Yes, because you have the ranking of such a criminal that everyone is coming after you.

Jones: They call me a smooth criminal~ or rather, as smooth as newly polished shoes.

<The two guys proceed to stare at him and Kelen comes back over>

O'Brian: Any news on that "invisible door" you were speaking of.

Kelen: It's... not there.

Jones: Exactly as we thought.

O'Brian: That's ok though. There will be doors that do not "magically" appear upon hitting them. Just normal, opening and closing doors.

Jones: So does that mean this water will not magically disappear now?

O'Brian: We will... discuss that later.

Kelen: I know what I learned and I know that there is a door here. There is just... something restricting us from leaving.

Collins: By restricting you mean... confine?

Kelen: Exactly that.

O'Brian: Who would want to restrict a bunch of guards like us?

Jones: ... if we are even guards.

Kelen: I have no idea, but that is what I am going to find out.

<The four of them stand there, but in the background there is a slight movement of an active camo person that is crouching down, but the four of them do not notice the figure>

Collins: So now you are a spy?

Jones: Why can she be a spy and I can't be a criminal?

O'Brian: No one is being anything. We are going back to base. Now.

<the three guys head back to the warthog, with jones and Collins entering first and then O'Brian looking at Kelen who is back starring at the water>

O'Brian: When I say now, that means now.

<He gets in the warthog and then the three of them head back to the base>

<the camera watches Kelen as she looks at the water and then follows her as she gets back on her mongoose and then goes in the distance. The camera then focuses in on the lake that is completely still, but then the figure that was in active camo stands up and then goes invisible again>